Many robberies of passengers on the Fourth nd Madison avenue trolley line have been reported within the last few weeks. So frequently have these robberies occurred that he conclusion has been drawn that a gang of thieves are travelling up and down the line for the purpose of preying upon the passengers On Thursday a man was robbed of a diamond stud and a woman lost a stick pin a few minutes later in the same car. These are only two of the most recent instances. According to all the reports, these robberies have been perpetrated on the cars that carry the crowds to and from the theatres. For an hour, from 7.15 to 8.15 o'clock, and from 11 b'clock until midnight, the surface cars are crowded with men and women keing to or returning from the theatres. The women usually wear their iewelry and the men carry their money in a pocket of their dress waist-coats. It usually happens that, just before a car reaches a certain corner, a well-dressed man signals the car to stop. Then he elbows his way through the crowd and disappears. Subsequently some of the passengers find that they have been robbed. stud and a woman lost a stick pin a few

the testimony was of a decidedly unpleasant character and Justice Gaynor several times temarked that counsel should be able to get at the facts without so many disgusting details. There was one case that was tried to the satisfaction of Justice Gaynor, and he remarked.

"It is a relief to hear a case to-day on this divorce calendar where the counsel evidently understands his prefession and what is fit. After listening to the evidence in most of the cases here to-day I have to wonder how our bar, in theory an educated and superior body of men, furnishes attorneys to come here with such disreputable cases. The stories told are of the lowest character and obviously made up in their worst details.

The university was by he means certain to accept a statue of Nathan Hale by Mr Partridge, if St Gandens offered such a statue it would probably be accepted. Mr stokes said in his letter that a tew hundred dollars had been raised for the Partridge statue, but that there was no morey behind the propert for a St Gandens statue. At the Brooklyn Alumni Association meeting last week the resolutions were rescined, with the comment that it was not thought desirable that the association should commit itself to the plan as a body.

President Hadley wrote to Mr. Plint some time ago to ask whether Mr Flint was responsible for a sweeping statement in the New Haven Register that the statue by Mr. Partridge would probably be accepted. Mr. Flint replied that be sid not moun "to muzzle the press of the country on the subject," and that Mr. Partridge was preparing the statue with the understanding that it was to be offered to the university by the subscribers and that the university by the subscribers and that the university was then to be free to take it or to leave it. Mr. Flint is also said to have referred in his letter to visits made by delegations of the Yale faculty to Mr. Partridge in the work.

The position of the friends of Mr. Partridge in the work we do not think that the president and ulty to Mr Partridge encouraging him to go on with the work.

The position of the friends of Mr. Partridge in the whole matter was thus stated yesterday.

We do not think that the president and his secretary have any right to interfere with us when we are arranging for a gift to the university. They have no right to accuse us of misrepresentation in sending out our circulars, which have all contained the name of Mr Partridge and have nowhere said that we represented the administration or the general body of the alumni. Of course the University may be industried to reject the statue, but we think that once we have shown our strength there will be a backing-down in the vicinity of New Haven.

President Hadley is quoted as having said that the quarrel between the representatives of Mr. Partridge and Mr. St. Gaudens in the New Haven committee became so acute that he was obliged to ask the committee to dissolve. Prof. J. M. Hoppin of the Partridge party and Prof. Wier to be of the Partridge party and Prof. Wier to be of the Partridge party and Prof. Wier to be of the St. Gaudens upholders.

The pictures of Mr. Partridge's model do not show a statue remarkably different from the statue of Nathan Hale by Macmonnies in the City Hall Park. Since the model was made Mr. Partridge has taken a plaster cast of the face of a Vaic athlete, Mr. Flint said yesterday, in the hope that he might gain some further inspiration, thereby.

New Haven, Feb s. The members of the committee who are in this city were thunder struck when they learned that the university had declared that graduates and friends of Vale are warned against them. One of the subscribers to the fund in this city, Col. G. Osborn, said.

"There is evidently a misunderstanding on the part of the Yale authorities with reference to this appeal. It is in no sense of the movement represents the administration of Vale or its organization. It is rather an attempt on 'he part of some of the alumni and friends of Vale to raise money for the Nathan Hale statue with the idea tha

The men conspicuous just now in the negotiations between the big steel companies are nearly all in New York. They are divided Into four groups, each making some hotel into four groups, each making some hotel its headquarters. The information which they are supposed to have is of such value that they are importuned for tips by all sorts of people who approach them on all sorts of pretexts. With the exception of Mr. Carnegle it is noticeable that most of them seem to be comparatively voung, considering the influence they wield. They look like men who might make themselves feit in the stock business for the next quarter of a century. They are divided naturally into two distinct groups, the men who have gone into the steel business at the hottom and worked themselves to the top and the men who wree taken into the cusiness near the top because as lawyers they and shown ability of the kind wanted by big combinations of capital.

A New York man of large wealth, who spends much of his time in watching his stock investments, said vesterday, by way of illustrating the temptation of servants to specutrating the temptation of servants to speculate on information which may leak from a dinner table, that his butler had given him a shock not long age.

"Thave had this butler for four or five years," he said, "and he has proved very satisfactory. Not long ago he asked me apologetically if a certain combination which had been discussed at my table was likely to be accomplished." "Why do you ask that?" I said.

"Why do you ask that?" I said.

"Well, sir, I thought of buying a few shares of the stock.

"As an investment?"

"No, sir, mertely a speculation.

"This interested me, and by questioning the fellow I found that he had been speculating for the past two years, largely on what he overheard discussed at my table, and that he had run his account up to more than $2,000. I advised him to draw out his money and invest it safely. I don't suppose that he took my advice, but I have been careful ever since that he should overhear no more business discussions in my house."

The Lotos Club expects to publish in a few weeks, a book off he hest after-dinner speeches that have been made in the clubbouse. Every that have been made in the clubbouse. Every distinguished after-dinner speaker who has visited New York in recent years has at some time been a guest at a Lotos Club dinner. The speeches made at these dinners have been reported in shorthand and preserved by the club. Some of the club s literary sharps have gone through these records of speeches, selected the best and arranged them for cubication in book form. The result will be unique volume filled with good stories and much eloquence.
